Redwing Marvin Orbach 2017-11 It was with much pleasure and reverence that I accepted the request by Richard Grove, Publisher of Hidden Brook Press, to write a foreword to Redwing, a provocative jewel of poems written by Marvin Orbach. The book was thoroughly and lovingly compiled by his daughter, Ariella. As I stepped into the man and his work, the first thing that impressed me was that Orbach, known to be very modest, had never told anyone about his poems: it was his wife, Gabriella, who found them after his passing. Ariella herself said once that her "dad was very humble." That makes Orbach an even greater librarian, book collector, poet and person. His formidable legacy of books and his passionate poetry honorably contribute to the already vast Canadian cultural mosaic. My usual approach to writing a foreword starts with skimming the work to get into the mood and style of the material. In the case of this book I changed that procedure as soon as I started reading by jotting down notes as I flipped through the pages outlining my first-read impressions. Orbach's book has been divided in the four seasons, in the order of Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter. As a whole I found the book to be a fine collection of thirty poems whose center is light, sometimes witty critique about social issues, and nature. The poet embraces nature and the wild world around him in "Silverfish." It is a truly heart-felt reflection. "True Happiness" ends the book as a vibrant, philosophical tour-de-force. Orbach's return to his playing with time: the yesterday-today-tomorrow labyrinth where he clings to "flashes of light." He realizes that life brings both happiness and sadness, and seems to have discovered a stopover where he "relaxes." Somehow I modestly tried to explain that idea in a poem of mine: "We must embrace life, it carries a bag of light, a bag of darkness, both... But we must cling onto life." I can feel that in Orbach's writing, communicated a thousand times better. You will fly high and low with Orbach's "blaze-of-light" Redwing. Like the bird, that takes flight or plummets to lightly touch the ground or the water, so does Orbach with his mighty verb and his sweeping descriptions in this pack of flapping poems carefully chosen by Ariella. The direct, sensitive poet has regaled us a world of movement, colors and sounds that we cannot freeze. His words are there waiting for us to open the book's pages so they can flutter and flee to Orbach's beloved nature where cormorants seem to "hold the answer to the great beyond." Orbach's daughter has given us an outstanding compilation of her father's poetry. She put into it her love, insight and endless admiration for a man who chose to have a low profile, yet left for us a huge patrimony that shall not go unnoticed. His collecting and writing hobbies are treasures now. Don't forget to open the book always following his instructions to Ariella when she would sit and read from his collection: "not to open the volumes too wide." Rise and glide then with the redwing, dear reader, it will be a flight to remember Miguel Ángel Olivé Iglesias PhD Associate Professor, University of Holguín, Cuba President of the Canada Cuba Literary Alliance (Cuban)

Collected Poems Alan Sillitoe 2016-07-12 A sweeping collection of poetry from one of Great Britain's most celebrated postwar writers.

Bestselling British novelist Alan Sillitoe delves into the profound and personal world of poetry in this collection of two hundred poems written between 1950 and 1990. Culled from seven previously published volumes of verse—and including twenty-one newly collected works—Sillitoe employs wit, humor, aggression, and longing to take readers into the depths of his perceptions and philosophical musings. The compilation begins with Sillitoe's early poems, which first appeared in The Rats and Other Poems (1960) while the writer was at work on his acclaimed novel Saturday Night and Sunday Morning. In "Shadow" a castaway meets a gentleman whom he recognizes as his own death. Meanwhile, a temperate climate renders death powerless in "Poem Written in Majorca." And in "Excerpts from 'The Rats'," themes of mental exile, isolation, and the proliferation of corruption echo the sentiments of Arthur Seaton, the hero of Saturday Night and Sunday Morning. Proceeding chronologically, the next section includes works from A Falling Out of Love and Other Poems (1964). Here, the reader encounters a haunting confrontation with suicide in "Poem Left by a Dead Man," a meditation on the elemental yet incomparable suffering of a poet in "Storm," and a description of metaphysical chores in "Housewife." Selections from Love in the Environs of Voronezh and Other Poems (1968) and Storm and Other Poems (1974) follow, including such works as "Baby" and "Smile," which ponder questions of inevitability and impossibility in everyday life. Unexpected perspectives on the Devil appear in the poems from Snow on the North Side of Lucifer (1979). Sun Before Departure (1974-1982) features the surreal and atmospheric "Horse on Wenlock Edge." And the selections from Tides and Stone Walls (1986), including the koanlike "Receding Tide," were inspired by a series of sea landscapes by photographer Victor Bowley. In the final section, New Poems (1986-1990), Sillitoe contemplates hope in the aftermath of war in "Hiroshima," and deciphers an uncanny Morse code message in "Noah's Arc." At once dark and luminous, Collected Poems offers both a departure from and insight into the "kitchen sink realism" Sillitoe is famous for. These pages impart an intimate look into the heart and mind of one of England's most celebrated authors, and convey a profound vision of life—one in which death is close, but laughter is never far away.
